Brief Description of Arguments to be Presented:

Walker discloses elements that are each assigned to at least one location on a punch-board.

Feola discloses elements that are each assigned to at least one location of a grid, i.e., the grid has one card location for each card.

The present invention discloses a set of elements available to each location, but only one element of the set is randomly assigned to a location. Thus, it is possible for an element not to be assigned to any location (or the same element assigned to all locations), or to every location.
